

Shoeshoes

Contributed by Bernie DeKoven
Thursday, 03 May 2007
Last Updated Friday, 15 June 2007

Apparently, the game of Shoeshoes is like Horseshoes or perhaps even Quoits, which is very like horseshoes except that it is played with things that look like oversized washers and are sometimes made of rope. Shoeshoes, on the other hand, involves a pair of human shoes whose laces have been tied together, and a chair.

Shoeshoes should also not be confused with Shoreshoes, as described herein in the the much vaunted Junkyard Sports® Hall of Games (though it fails to point out how cleverly the letters of horseshoes can be used to spell shoreshoes).

As for Shoeshoes, one evidently throws one's tied-together shoes in such a way as to get them to hang on a leg, or perhaps even straddle the seat. Different points are awarded for different configurations as they occur.

The required distance one is to stand from the chair, the preferred chair, as well as lace-length and shoe size, have not yet been established. {mos_fb_discuss:2}